

Dear Rutgers Law Community,

On behalf of the Public Interest Law Student Association at Rutgers Law School (PILSA), we stand in solidarity with the Association of Black Law Students (ABLS), and want to voice our support of their recent statement. We also support the Black Lives Matter movement, and all of our Black peers, faculty, and staff at Rutgers Law School, and the Black community at large.

We mourn the brutal murder of George Floyd that happened just last week. Floyd was a father, a son, a brother, a friend, and most importantly a human. We also mourn the countless Black lives lost to police violence and racism everyday, such as Breonna Taylor, Ahmaud Arbery, and David McAtee.

PILSA is committed to educating ourselves on matters of racial injustice and police brutality, and standing together with the community. We encourage our peers to educate themselves on matters of systemic racism and police violence. It is our responsibility as allies to the Black community to do so. As law students we have an obligation to speak out when injustices are being committed: today, tomorrow, and everyday.
